RCMP charge 11 teens over alleged hazing

Lanigan. Bruising and muscle damage among injuries sustained by Grade 9, 10 students

MARCO VIGLIOTTI
marco.vigliotti@metronews.ca

RCMP have charged 11 people in connection to alleged hazing at a rural Saskatchewan party that left high school students injured.

Police issued a total of 34 charges in the incident near the town of Lanigan, including assault with a weapon and assault causing bodily harm on students in grades 9 and 10.

Mounties say the initiation ritual included "paddling" victims with a "modified" goalie stick and pouring chocolate syrup, flour and eggs on them.

A number of the students — all boys — were bruised, and one suffered muscle damage to his leg and buttocks, police said.

"There are five victims known to us. We do believe there are more," RCMP spokesman Sgt. Craig Cleary said on Monday.

RCMP say the incidents occurred at a "freshie party" on Sept. 6 in a field about four kilometres southeast of Lanigan, east of Saskatoon.

All of the suspects are teenage males. More charges could be laid if additional victims come forward, Cleary said.

The names of nine youth suspects can't be released. However, two men are among the accused: Brayden Braun, 18, of Lanigan, was charged with assault with a weapon; and Kyle Ekstrom, 18, also of Lanigan, was charged with assault causing bodily harm and three counts of assault with a weapon.

The investigation has been hampered, Cleary said, by resistance from those involved.

"The co-operation from the families of potential victims isn't quite the same as from the ones that have stepped forward," he said.

All the suspects will appear in court on Oct. 21.

Greg Miller, assistant deputy minister of the Saskatchewan Ministry of Education, said concerns about hazing were identified during consultations with the public this past summer as part of an anti-bullying plan, which should be completed this fall.

"The ultimate goal for the ministry ... is to ensure students are safe at all times," said Miller.

RCMP spokesman Sgt. Craig Cleary told media on Monday in Regina that the probe into the alleged hazing ritual has been hampered by poor co-operation from potential victims. MARCO VIGLIOTTI/METRO

First medical pot licences under new rules awarded to Saskatoon firm

Prairie Plant Systems Inc. Company has been selling weed to Health Canada for 13 years

A Saskatoon company has been granted the first two licences to produce and distribute medical marijuana under new Health Canada pot rules.

Prairie Plant Systems Inc. has been Health Canada's only supplier of pharmaceutical-grade marijuana for 13 years. CEO Brent Zettl says the new regulations mean people won't have to go through Health Canada.

"I think it really heralds the beginning of the new method and the new ways in which patients are going to be accessing medical marijuana in the future," said Zettl.

"Patients now will be able to see their doctor; with the doctors they'll fill in the medical note and they'll be able to actually access medical marijuana directly from the licensed producer, such as ourselves right now. Health Canada is stepping away from being the provider of it and just acting as the regulatory body.

"What it really boils down to is now it's being treated much more like a true pharmaceutical in the way that it's going to be accessed by patients," he added.

Prairie Plant Systems has also launched a subsidiary called CanniMed Ltd., which will be the distribution and support hub for patients and physicians, as well as the brand name of the pharmaceutical-grade pot products.

Zettl says the company had focused on one type of marijuana with the Health Canada contract.

It will soon start selling three brands of pharmaceutical-grade marijuana. Each brand has a different strength of THC and CBD — the active ingredients in pot.

"Certain people respond better to higher levels of THC for managing pain ... and they want the higher concentration — (that's) what we've had from patient feedback — because they actually ingest it as opposed to smoke it, so they want to have a higher concentration to begin with," Zettle said. Home a real-life Little House on the Prairie

With her tiny-home project, Lydia Holden is bringing the simple living revolution to Saskatoon. JACOB MORGAN/METRO

Lydia Holden has accomplished something very few young Canadians can attest to: She owns her own home.

The 23-year-old Saskatoon woman began work on her tiny-home project last spring and completed construction in September of 2012.

For the past year, she has been living in the 136-square-foot miniature house on and off in between travelling.

"This cost me $30,000, which I saved before I started building, so now I live rent- and mortgage-free," said Holden.

"As a result, I work less and travel more."

In October she plans to take a trip to New Zealand to learn about farming. Her goal is to become as eco-friendly as possible.

"The easiest way to lower your impact and footprint is to go smaller," she said.

She added that the structure of the house features one solar panel, a composting toilet and a bit of propane for heat, forcing her to lower energy her consumption.

"I use about 20 litres of water a day," she said.

"That's like three toilet flushes for other people."

While some might balk at the lack of room, Holden said she enjoys the minimal lifestyle and even shares the house with a partner. JACOB MORGAN/METRO

Former Supreme Court judge to back Quebec values charter

In defence of equality. Claire L'Heureux-Dubé says the face of females in Muslim world is increasingly uncovered

A former Supreme Court of Canada judge who claims she sees more veiled women in Quebec than in her travels to Muslim countries such as Pakistan and Morocco is expected to line up behind the Parti Québécois' charter of values and lend her legal credibility to the proposed ban on religious clothing in the public service.

The province's minority government argues that its initiative will bring to heel a growing wave of unreasonable faith-based exceptions from societal and workplace rules, guarantee equality of the sexes in the province and reinforce the religious neutrality of the state.

The many critics in the political, legal and academic arenas warn the proposal would violate religious freedoms already enshrined in Canadian and Quebec charter rights and inevitably be ruled unconstitutional.

But Claire L'Heureux-Dubé, who sat on the country's top court from 1987 until 2002, argued in a lengthy May 2013 radio interview that some rights are more fundamental than others and that, in Canada, the right to equality trumps religion.

"My vision is that there are fundamental rights. The right to live is fundamental. There is no accommodation.... Equality is the same thing," she told Radio-Canada host Michel Lacombe.

"There are also civil liberties that are extremely important, but they're not on the same level. Freedom of expression and freedom of religion are another thing. They are civil liberties that can be reduced by what is reasonable in a free and democratic society."

L'Heureux-Dubé said that in travels abroad for legal conferences, she has noticed that the face of females in the Muslim world is increasingly one that is uncovered.

L'Heureux-Dubé did not respond to an interview request Monday but she is confirmed as a member of Rassemblement pour la laïcité (Rally for Secularism), which will present itself Tuesday morning as a diverse group of union leaders, academics, politicians and activists in support of a strictly secular Quebec. Hearings begin in Quebec student protest inquiry

Protesters opposing tuition fee hikes demonstrate in Montreal in August 2012. A government-appointed commission looking into the protests looks to make future demonstrations more peaceful. GRAHAM HUGHES/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The head of a Quebec government-appointed commission looking into the province's 2012 student protests, which made international news, hopes his inquiry helps make future demonstrations more peaceful.

Serge Menard, a former public security minister, kicked off the public hearings Monday by saying the events of the so-called "Maple Spring" had led to a crisis of confidence regarding police.

"It's a disturbing situation," he said in his opening statement.

"The commission will take a systemic look at these events of spring 2012 — not only to draw lessons from 2012, but to put everything in place so that if a similar intense debate comes along in Quebec in the future, it will unfold peacefully in a very democratic spirit."

The raucous protests were staged against tuition increases, introduced by the former Liberal government and eventually pared back when the Parti Québécois took office.

The PQ called the hearings earlier this year under pressure from the left, which accused law enforcement of serial abuses in quelling the protests.

Arrests

Former Quebec public security minister Serge Menard says there were more than 2,000 protest-related arrests during the 2012 tuition-fee demonstrations.

But questions about the government's objectivity were raised immediately when, on the very day it announced the inquiry, the minister responsible blamed the Liberals for the unrest. Critics on the left were also upset with the limited scope and power of the commission.

On Monday, Menard shared statistics about those restless months.

He said there were more than 2,000 protest-related arrests, scores of ethics complaints against police for alleged abuses, injuries, property damage, cancelled classes and millions in law-enforcement costs.

Is this just fantasy? Arrested Queen fan going into politics

An Alberta man who became a YouTube sensation for enthusiastically singing the song Bohemian Rhapsody from the back seat of a police car is going into politics.

Robert Wilkinson is running for mayor of Edson, a town west of Edmonton.

The town says Wilkinson submitted the necessary five signatures from residents along with his nomination papers to register as a candidate.

Wilkinson was convicted of impaired driving last November, fined $1,400 and prohibited from driving for one year.

Young men need to keep privates private: RCMP

Richmond RCMP are warning young men in the Vancouver suburb to make better choices about the private details — or parts — they reveal online.

Mounties say they have investigated four incidents of attempted extortion over the last month involving men who thought they were having a private Internet chat with an unknown woman in an unknown country. In each case, the chat led to the man exposing himself.

That's when the chat became anything but friendly as police say the victims were told to send money to avoid having the videos sent to their friends and family.

Police are looking for Allan Bosomworth and are asking the man to turn himself in.

Canada keeping an eye on Kenya after 'cowardly' attack

Local connection? Amid reports a Canadian was among the attackers, PM Harper denies homegrown terrorism is a 'mass phenomenon'

Canada will continue to work with its international partners to confront terrorism, and will focus on the group responsible for the "cowardly" attack on a shopping mall in Kenya, Prime Minister Stephen Harper said Monday.

Two Canadians are among the 62 confirmed fatalities in the Nairobi raid and hostage-taking by the Somalia-based, al-Qaida-linked group al-Shabab. More than 175 people were injured in the assault that began Saturday and remained unresolved Monday afternoon.

An early, unconfirmed report claimed a Canadian was among the "mujahedeen" who staged the attack.

The prime minister, at a press conference with his visiting Italian counterpart Enrico Letta, refused to comment directly on the report, and dismissed the suggestion that Canada may be vulnerable to homegrown terrorism.

"I'm not worried about such a thing as a mass phenomenon," Harper said, "but obviously there are always cases that we follow very closely and work with our international partners on. We have had, as you know, a series of legislation on anti-terrorism to give our police and security forces various tools to deal with the phenomenon."

Officials have confirmed that diplomat Annemarie Desloges was one of two Canadians killed when gunmen opened fire with AK-47s and threw grenades at Nairobi's upscale Westgate mall, a venue frequented by expatriates and wealthy locals. Media reports identified Vancouver businessman Naguib Damji as the other Canadian victim.

Harper said Canada and its allies abroad are monitoring the situation, and he once again extended his condolences to the families, friends and colleagues of the victims.

European leaders take a stand on racist taunts

Cecile Kyenge. More than a dozen nations say attacks against Italy's first black cabinet minister 'must stop'

Cabinet ministers from more than a dozen European nations came to Rome on Monday in a show of support for Italy's first black cabinet minister, who has faced racist taunts ever since she was appointed in April.

The ministers signed a declaration condemning racism as anathema to Europe's democratic principles. They also called for the continent to embrace diversity and for its politicians to be models of unity, not intolerance.

They said the attacks that Integration Minister Cecile Kyenge has been subjected to were unacceptable and must stop, particularly because they have come from Italy's political class.

One member of Italy's xenophobic Northern League has called the Congolese-born Kyenge a "Congolese monkey." Another — the Senate vice-president — likened her to an orangutan, and a third suggested on Facebook that she be raped so she would know what it feels like to be a victim of crime.

Declaration

- Belgium's deputy prime minister, Joelle Milquet, sponsored the initiative after deciding the attacks against Kyenge couldn't go unanswered.
- She said she was pleasantly surprised that so many countries quickly agreed to support Kyenge and sign the declaration, which also calls for a broader European pact against racism to be launched in January.

Kyenge, an eye doctor who has lived in Italy since 1983, has responded to the attacks with reserve, saying it's not for her to denounce them but for Italians and their institutions to do so. On Monday, ministers and ambassadors from 16 other European Union nations answered on her behalf and condemned the attacks against her.

"Political leaders must be models of unity, acceptance of diversity and tolerance, and not actors of division and intolerance," the declaration read.

Kyenge said the event marked an important moment for Italy and the rest of Europe because the attacks weren't against just her but also against government institutions. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

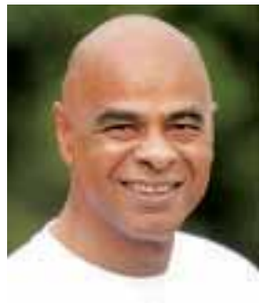
Germany. Chemist, actor become first black members of parliament

A chemist and an actor — both with family roots in Senegal — have become Germany's first black federal lawmakers, according to official election results released Monday.

They were among 34 lawmakers with immigrant backgrounds to win seats in Sunday's election, up from 21 in the previous term, said the Migration Media Service, a group that provides facts and figures on immigration in Germany.

Although nearly one in five of Germany's 80 million people are immigrants, or the children or grandchildren of immigrants, relatively few have made it into the federal legislature. Until now there were no black lawmakers in parliament, despite more than 500,000 people of recent African origin believed to be living in Germany.



Charles M. Huber FREDRIK VON ERICHSEN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"My election into the German Parliament is of historical importance," said Karamba Diaby, a Senegalese-born chemist who moved to the city of Halle in 1986 after receiving a scholarship to study in communist East Germany.

The 51-year-old, who gained German citizenship in 2001, said his priority would be to promote equal opportunities in education. "Every child born in Germany should have the chance to be successful in school regardless of their social background or the income of their parents."

The other black lawmaker elected Sunday was Charles M. Huber, a 56-year-old actor born in Munich to a Senegalese father and a German mother. Huber is a member of Chancellor Angela Merkel's Christian Democratic Union. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Swedes outraged by illegal police registry of Roma

Sweden's police have been severely criticized for compiling a secret, illegal registry of more than 4,000 Roma, including children.

In a country known for human rights, ethnic equality and strict adherence to the rule of law, politicians expressed dismay at the existence of the list, confirmed by police after a report in a national daily earlier Monday.

Parliamentary justice committee chairman Morgan Johansson described the list as "illegal," saying the constitution forbids registering people by ethnicity. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

‘Bargain hunter’ billionaire behind BlackBerry bid

From CrackBerry to discount bin. Prem Watsa is backing the $4.7B deal that could breathe life into moribund company

Fairfax Financial Holdings offered Monday to buy BlackBerry in a deal that values the company at about $4.7 billion US. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

Less than seven weeks after stepping down from the board at BlackBerry, billionaire investor Prem Watsa emerged Monday as the face behind a $4.7-billion US deal to save the Canadian tech giant.

Often referred to as the Warren Buffett of Canada for his investment choices, Watsa is now in the spotlight for helping broker the potential sale of the struggling smartphone maker.

“He’s obviously a value investor. He’s a bargain hunter but not in the classic short-term sense,” said Eric Kirzner, a professor of finance at the Rotman School of Management at the University of Toronto.

“Like Buffett, he likes to acquire great companies at bargain prices and hold them for a long time and sometimes gets actively involved.”

Watsa, who heads insurance firm FairFax Financial, is leading a consortium that will acquire all the outstanding shares of the Waterloo, Ont.-based BlackBerry for $9 US per share. Toronto-based FairFax is already the struggling smartphone maker’s largest shareholder, owning about 10 per cent of the stock.

Buy low, sell high?

“Like Buffett, he likes to acquire great companies at bargain prices and hold them for a long time.”

Eric Kirzner, a professor at the Rotman School of Management at the University of Toronto, on Prem Watsa’s investment style. Watsa is pictured at right.

Watsa joined the board at BlackBerry in January 2012 following a shakeup at the executive level with the departures of BlackBerry co-CEOs Jim Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis and their replacement in the top job by current CEO Thorsten Heins.

At the time, the FairFax chairman and chief executive said that a turnaround for the maker of smartphones that were once so popular they were known as CrackBerrys would take upwards of three to five years.

Kirzner said the timing of this deal is questionable, considering that it’s been less than two years since Heins took over.

Since then, the company has slashed staff, with some 4,500 employees — 40 per cent of the remaining workforce — being let go in the latest job cuts announced last Friday.

In the same announcement, BlackBerry said it would face a writedown of nearly $1 billion when it reports its latest quarterly earnings this Friday.

Just like the boomers, VW’s hippie bus is retiring

It carried hippies through the ’60s, hauled surfers in search of killer waves during endless summers and serves as a workhorse across the developing world, but the long, strange trip of the Volkswagen van is ending. Brazil is the last place in the world still producing the iconic vehicle, or “bus” as it’s known by aficionados, but VW says production will end Dec. 31. Safety regulations mandate that every vehicle in Brazil must have airbags and anti-lock braking systems starting in 2014, and the company says it cannot change production to meet the law. Although output will halt in Brazil, there should be plenty of VW vans rolling along for decades, if only because there are so many, and they are so durable. VW produced more than 10 million Volkswagen Transporter vans globally since the model was introduced 63 years ago in Germany, though not all resemble the classic hippie machine. This is the best story ever! N.Y. fights ‘deceitful’ reviews

A perfect hotel? An amazing restaurant? Teeth whitener that leads to romance?

Such things may only truly exist in online reviews, and New York’s attorney general says many of them are fakes, just as more consumers searching for guidance are starting to bite.

Attorney General Eric Schneiderman is trying to dismantle what he calls a system of creating false online reviews for products and services. On Monday he announced that he has settled cases with 19 companies that included $350,000 in penalties. The fake plaudits are sometimes called “astroturfing,” a reference to the synthetic grass used on sports fields.

Wow, that’s thrilling

By 2014, one researcher estimates 10 to 15 per cent of social media reviews will be fake.

“Consumers rely on reviews from their peers to make daily purchasing decisions on anything from food and clothing to recreation and sightseeing,” Schneiderman said. “This investigation into large-scale, intentional deceit across the Internet tells us that we should approach online reviews with caution.”

TOUGH TO KEEP UP IN TECH AGE

SHE SAYS

Jessica Napier
metronews.ca

Five hours. That's the approximate amount of time I lost this weekend thanks to Apple's iOS7 update. I spent about 45 minutes downloading the new software on my iPhone and an entire afternoon trying to figure out how to use it.

Apple's website bills the new mobile operating system as a "lively and intuitive interface" with more than 200 new features to make your mobile life easier and more enjoyable. But unless you're an Apple employee or an iPhone fanboy, it will take you some time to familiarize yourself with the new interface. And for every additional candle on your birthday cake, the learning curve is exponentially steeper.

Like all new forms of technological progress, iOS7 offers plenty of new features that you never actually wanted but soon enough you'll wonder how you ever lived without them. I updated my phone less than 48 hours ago and yet I can't imagine going back to a time before I had the option to customize my vibration alerts and select from a variety of live photo filters before snapping a selfie.

A host of updated apps and tools have now been unleashed into the world in an effort to make our lives more streamlined. Thanks to the many built-in apps, my device has become a calculator, a camera, a level, a flashlight, a compass, a stopwatch and, yes, occasionally I might even use it as a phone.

While digital advancements might be rendering certain physical objects obsolete (provided your battery life holds out), outdated technology has a way of lingering around in a referential sort of way.

I've always thought it was funny that many smartphone icons have been designed to resemble their ancestral counterparts. Years after it became obsolete, the floppy disk continues to be memorialized as the "save" button on all Microsoft products. Similarly, email icons appear as a hand-delivered envelope, the ubiquitous green call button mimics an old telephone handset, and the draining battery symbol resembles a classic AA.

Future generations might never even realize that these icons actually represent outdated tangible items. They will never know what it is like to live in a wired world of landlines and dial-up Internet. In their reality, swipes and taps will have replaced mouse clicks, every smartphone will have a built-in retina scanner (fingerprints are so 2013) and hipsters will show off their ironic collections of keyboards and other desktop computer relics.

For now, I'm still trying to navigate the Technicolor dream world that is iOS7.

Sure, the vibrant interface is a bit too cheerful and the 3D parallax wallpaper is giving me motion sickness, but all early adopters know that it always takes a while to acclimatize to a new land.

What exactly are the bees trying to do?
They are making chains with their bodies so they can repair a honeycomb. But for scientists it's still a mystery why they actually do this — it's a gaping hole within research. For about two hours they were forging a line in a vain attempt to fill the hole.

When the wind would blow, the bees would scatter. But as soon as it died down, in a flurry the bees would return to build.

RE: Coca-Cola Apologizes For 'You Retard' Bottle Cap, published Sept. 19

I would like to express my gratitude to all those involved in producing the article and bringing the widespread issue of social inequality to the attention of the public.

An incident that could have easily been passed by was brought to the attention of all the readers of your newspaper and will now be in the back of their minds as they go through their days, weeks, and lives.

Coca-Cola, a world renowned supporter of all types of people in all walks of life, has made a mistake that should cause a serious problem for the company. The fact that this was done as part of a promotion that takes our two official languages and puts them together is appalling.

The link between the two languages should be a cause for celebration, appreciation, acceptance and a sign that our country is moving forward towards a place where everyone is accepted regardless of their language, race, sexual orientation, beliefs and abilities.

Don Jon, Joseph Gordon Levitt's directorial debut, couples a novel pun with a novel complication. The star plays a modern reinvention of the legendary lothario, a New Jersey gym rat with a porn addiction that may hamper his blossoming relationship with his breathtaking co-star Scarlett Johansson. Rom-coms that defy fluffy conventions are rare beasts. We line up the best of this sparsely populated sub-genre.

MIKE DOJC

5 Out of the box rom-coms

Shallow Hall

(Jack Black, Gwyneth Paltrow) — Hal is a superficial to the nth degree kind of guy. Hypnotized by Tony Robbins to see only inner beauty, he falls head over heels for a 300 pound woman. The story arc may ride the traditional rom-com waves of emotion, but it does so while simultaneously skewering the genre thanks to the Farrelly brothers' bold and brave brand of funny business.

Safety Not Guaranteed

(Aubrey Plaza, Mark Duplass) — A cynical journalist with a couple apathetic interns investigates a kooky classified ad placed by an alleged time traveller who is seeking a sidekick for a mission into the past. This smart and imaginative film manages to imbue weighty relationship issues with an endearing warmth while weaving in serious doses of chuckles.

Silver Linings Playbook

(Bradley Cooper, Jennifer Lawrence) — The Hangover trilogy's breakout star shed his frat house rep with an Oscar nom worthy turn as a bipolar man released into his parents' care after an eight month stint in a mental-health facility. A gritty rom-com that eschews the hollow hallmarks of the genre by uniting a pair of truly damaged characters, Playbook focuses on serious relationship building rather than relying on cute contrivances.

Punch Drunk Love

(Adam Sandler, Emily Watson) — The Sandman is still very recognizable as an insecure, tormented sad-sack prone to bouts of rage. Only this time he's not a caricature and the overarching themes of loneliness and cathartic self-acceptance ring truer as a result. But throw in an extortionist sex phone line operator and a scheme to stockpile pudding to collect frequent flyer miles and you won't be needing a tissue box.

Lars and the Real Girl

(Ryan Gosling, Kelli Garner) — At the behest of a shrink, in order to get to the root of a deep-seeded psychological delusion, Lars' family and friends play along with his belief that a life-sized doll is a real woman that he's in a committed relationship with. Instead of being tempted by cheap gags, the movie doubles down on tenderness as town folk play along in an effort to free him of his social anxiety.

Bling it back: He put a ring on it, and it may not be returning

The engagement may be off, but Miley Cyrus is apparently keeping the ring. Cyrus is said to still be hanging onto the hand-cut 19th century ring — estimated to be worth about $100,000 — that Liam Hemsworth gave her, according to E! News. "The ring has not been returned to the jeweler, Neil Lane," a source says. "Generally, the protocol is for the bride to keep the ring. It's up to her whether or not she wants to return it or keep it as a memento."

The Word

Biggest blunder or best-ever Emmy speech?

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

Merritt Wever won best supporting actress in a comedy Sunday night at the Emmys, and her acceptance speech was one for the books.

"Thank you so much," she said. "Um, I gotta go." And then she went, as though the Emmy audience were a bad blind date and she was slipping out of a coffee shop.

What would lead an actress to shrug off her moment of glory without thanking everyone they'd ever met?

Sounds like the Nurse Jackie star just had a good old-fashioned freak-out. "It's hard to do those," she said backstage after the show, according to Variety. "I don't know how to feel yet. ... I have therapy next week."

So reporters should probably wait outside her therapist's office if they want to finally hear her thank her publicist.

Or we could all just agree her speech was awesome?

Laura Prepon

Prepon knew her pals were meant to be

Mila Kunis and Ashton Kutcher's former That '70s Show co-star Laura Prepon "wasn't surprised" when Kunis and Kutcher began dating last year, telling Us Weekly that it's "incredible" to see them together. In fact, she confirms that way back when they made their sitcom, Kutcher was actually Kunis' first kiss — on-screen or off. "He was, he was," she says. Prepon also believes that, should what appeared to be an engagement ring on Kunis' finger this month lead to a wedding, she'll get an invitation. "Obviously if people wanted us there — which she would because we're all family — then of course I would be there," she says. "We support each other no matter what."

Douglas was gracious enough to mention her in his acceptance speech, though, saying, "I want to thank my wife, Catherine, for her support" while still sporting his wedding ring.

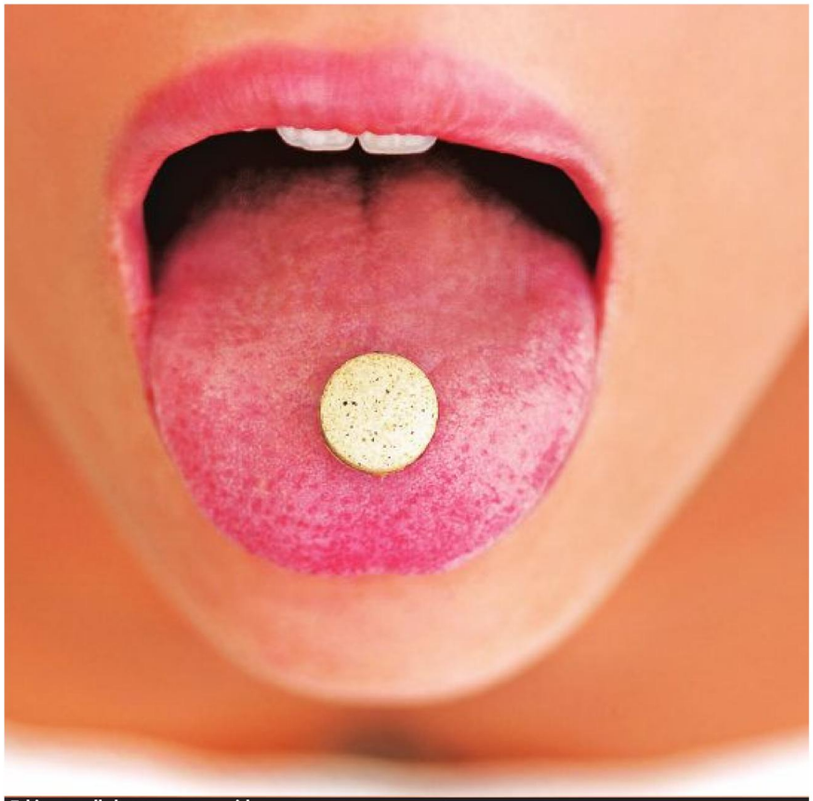
Drugs. Pop culture have people thinking molly is a safe drug but the reality couldn't be farther from the truth

MEREDITH ENGEL
Metro World News



Taking a molly has some severe risks. ISTOCK PHOTOS

Ecstasy has long been a popular club drug, but its molecular form — dubbed "molly" — is going through a surge in popularity these days.

Miley Cyrus sings about dancing with molly in her song We Can't Stop, and a series of deaths from the drug in the past two weeks is being linked to a possible bad batch sweeping the U.S. East Coast.

Young people love it because they seem to think it's a purer (and therefore safer) form of ecstasy, says Dr. Travis Stork, an emergency physician and host of TV's The Doctors, which just premiered its sixth season. But that "could not be further from the truth," he says.

"The young adult culture that's embracing (this) has this false sense of security that it's safe," says Stork. "Especially when it's in a powder form. The truth is you have no idea what's really in it."

As a stimulant, molly revs up bodily functions — everything from metabolism to heart rate to blood pressure to brain function.

Even though it's in the same drug category as caffeine, taking molly is not like just drinking a giant mug of coffee.

Molly also has a psychedelic element to it, one that can cause hallucinations and feelings of euphoria and invincibility.

The consequences of that high include a spike in heart rate and blood pressure, hyperthermia (when the body overheats), hyponatremia (a major sodium imbalance in the body) and seizures, all of which can be fatal.

Stork urges parents to speak to their children about the drug before their peers start the conversation.

"There's so much misinformation out there amongst kids, and obviously we know that kids are willing to say or believe anything," he says. "My advice is have an honest conversation about drugs with your kids before their friends do in a respectful, trusting way, because once that conversation's been had, if it's been had by someone else, it could be too late."

Miley Cyrus' recent song has helped to popularize the use of the drug. CONTRIBUTED

There's no "right" age to start that dialogue, he adds — it's about knowing your child, being involved in his or her life and keeping your ears open.

"If you're worried about someone else having the conversation with your child, that's the time to have the conversation," he says. "As a parent, it can be uncomfortable to bring these things up — just like the conversations about sex can be difficult to bring up — but they can also be incredibly, incredibly meaningful."

Country twist on comfort food

ROSE REISMAN
For more, visit rosereisman.com or follow her on twitter @rosereisman

This is a wonderful comfort stew as the weather gets cooler. Leg of lamb is a great cut of meat for this stew but feel free to substitute top sirloin beef. If you use stewing beef you will have to simmer the stew longer until the meat is tender.

1. In nonstick saucepan, heat 2 tsp of oil over medium-high heat. Dust the lamb cubes in the flour and add to the saucepan. Cook for 5 minutes or until well-browned on all sides. Remove lamb from saucepan.

2. Blanch the pearl onions in a pot of boiling water for 1 minute; refresh in cold water and drain. Peel and set aside.

3. In same saucepan, heat remaining 1 tsp oil over medium heat; add garlic, mushrooms, leeks, carrots, bell peppers, zucchini and pearl onions. Cook 10 minutes or until softened, stirring occasionally. Stir in tomato paste and wine. Return lamb to saucepan along with tomatoes, stock, rosemary, bay leaf and salt and pepper. Bring to a boil, cover, reduce heat to medium-low, and simmer for 25 minutes or until carrots and meat are tender.

4. Meanwhile, put potatoes in saucepan with water to cover; bring to a boil and cook 15 minutes or until tender when pierced with knife. In nonstick skillet, melt margarine over medium heat; add garlic and onions and cook 4 minutes or until softened. Drain cooked potatoes and mash with chicken stock and sour cream. Stir in onion mix and salt and pepper. Place potato mix on large serving platter and pour stew over top.

Lamb Vegetable Stew with Garlic Mashed Potatoes

This recipe serves six. MARK SHAPIRO, FROM ROSE REISMAN'S ENLIGHTENED HOME COOKING (ROBERT ROSE)

Ingredients

- 3 tsp vegetable oil
- 12 oz leg of lamb, visible fat removed, cut into 1-inch cubes
- 3 tbsp flour
- 1 cup pearl onions
- 2 tsp minced garlic
- 1 1/2 cups sliced mushrooms
- 1 1/2 cups chopped leeks
- 1 cup sliced carrots
- 1 cup chopped bell peppers
- 3/4 cup sliced zucchini
- 1/4 cup tomato paste
- 1/3 cup red or white wine
- 2 cups chopped tomatoes
- 2 cups beef or chicken stock
- 2 tsp dried rosemary
- 1 bay leaf
- Salt and pepper to taste

Mashed Potatoes

- 1 1/2 lb potatoes, peeled and quartered
- 1 tbsp margarine or butter
- 1 tbsp minced garlic
- 1 cup chopped onion

You know honey is good for you but you don't know why or what to look for, right?

Hugh Simpson is an artisanal beekeeper in Collingwood, Ont. (ospreybluffshoney.ca) and he busts some honey myths.

Myth: When honey crystallizes it spoils

• Honey never spoils. Crystals are caused by sugars combining and forming together. It is actually good because it tells you your honey has never been heated. Just immerse the jar in boiled water and let sit to reverse the "problem."

Myth: Pasteurizing makes honey healthier

• It does the opposite in that it adds heat, which kills the enzymes that provide a health benefit. The true honey lover wants the crystals, which indicate a less processed product.

Myth: Squeeze bottles are best

• While it may feel easier to squeeze a dollop, you really want to purchase your honey in glass jars. If only so you can uncrystallize easily without risking plastic leaching.

Myth: Honey colour means nothing

• The colour of honey is a function of nectar source. The darker the colour, the more intense the taste. Light honey comes from canola or basswood. Orange honey's bees are fed on dandelions. Multifloral honey is mid-season and mid-colour. Late season is richer because of wild flowers like goldenrod.

Lunch. Roasted Cauliflower Soup

1. Heat oven to 400 F. Line rimmed baking sheet with cooking parchment.

2. Use paring knife to cut out and discard core of each head of cauliflower, then cut heads into large florets. Place florets in bowl and drizzle with olive oil. Toss to coat. Sprinkle with about 2 teaspoons of salt, toss.

3. Arrange the florets in a single layer on the prepared baking sheet. Roast for 30 minutes, then use tongs to flip the florets, then roast for another 30 minutes, or until the florets are deeply caramelized and golden.

4. Transfer florets to blender and add 2 cups of broth. Purée, then add the half-and-half and purée for another 3 minutes, or until completely smooth. The purée should be very thick. With the blender running, add the remaining broth, the thyme and white pepper. Taste and adjust seasonings.

5. The soup can be transferred to a saucepan and gently heated, or refrigerated overnight before reheating and serving.

6. When ready to serve, garnish each bowl with a bit of cooked bacon and a sprig of fresh thyme. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/

ELIZABETH KARMEL, AUTHOR OF SOAKED, SLATHERED AND SEASONED.

Ingredients

- 2 heads cauliflower (about 4 1/2 lbs total)
- 1/4 cup olive oil
- Kosher salt
- 4 cups chicken broth (or more for a thinner soup), divided
- 2 cups half-and-half
- 2 tsp chopped fresh thyme, plus 8 sprigs to garnish
- Pinch of white pepper
- 10 slices apple wood smoked bacon (or 3 slices country ham), minced and cooked

Spike your Dutch Baby with sausage and seasonal apples

A basic Dutch baby is a common baked pancake. This recipe alters it with crumbled breakfast sausage and chopped apples, a delicious and filling combination that blends savoury and sweet flavours.

1. Heat the oven to 400 F.

2. In a blender, combine the eggs, flour, milk, yogurt, vanilla, cinnamon and salt. Blend until very smooth, then set aside. Alternatively, the batter can be made in a bowl using a whisk.

Ingredients

- 3 eggs
- 1/2 cup all-purpose flour
- 1/2 cup milk
- 1/4 cup plain Greek yogurt
- 1 tsp vanilla extract
- 1/2 tsp cinnamon
- Pinch salt
- 1 lb loose breakfast-style pork sausage meat
- 3 medium apples, divided
- 1 small yellow onion, diced
- 1 tbsp sugar
- Maple syrup, to serve

This recipe serves six. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

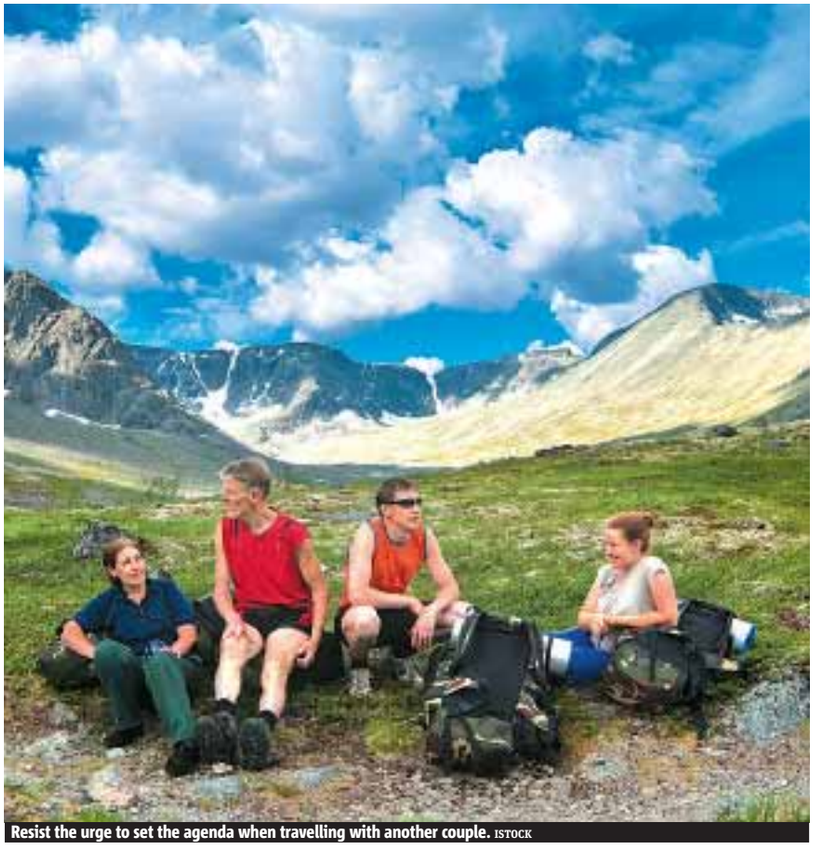
3. Coat a large cast-iron or oven-safe non-stick skillet with cooking spray, then heat it over medium-high. Add the sausage and cook, breaking up the meat, until just starting to brown, about 10 minutes.

4. Meanwhile, peel and core 2 of the apples, then cut them into 1/2-inch chunks. Add the cut apples and onion to the skillet, then sauté until they are just tender, about 6 to 8 minutes. Spread the sausage-apple mixture evenly over the bottom of the skillet and remove the pan from the heat.

5. Core the remaining apple, then cut it crosswise into very thin slices. A mandoline is best for this, but a food processor or careful knife work is fine, too.

6. Pour batter evenly over the sausage-apple mix. Tilt pan as needed to ensure it spreads evenly. Arrange the apple slices over the top of the batter; it's fine if they overlap. Sprinkle the apples with the sugar, then bake for 20 minutes.

7. To serve, slice into wedges and drizzle with maple syrup. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



Resist the urge to set the agenda when travelling with another couple. ISTOCK

When four becomes one: How to travel with another couple

The more the hairier?
Travelling as a couple can be tough but a foursome is tougher; here are some tips to make it easier

life@metronews.ca

Maybe you've mastered the art of travelling as a couple. But the same rules don't apply when travelling in a foursome. Back in the '90s, the Spice Girls wrote the rules of engagement for when 2 Become 1, but what about when four become one? The more the merrier could be amended to the more the hairier. Here's how to double up without doubling the drama.

Itinerary integration
The key to a stress-free co-coupling vacay is to assure that nothing is compulsory. Once you make the decision to hit a destination in tandem, there's an expectation that group outings will be de rigueur. Proclamations like, "We're in Paris; we simply must spend at least one day touring the Louvre and soaking up the art" can be fighting words. Resist the urge to set the agenda. Instead, seek common ground on your sightseeing wish list and split up the rest of the way.

Dining deliberation
Deciding where to eat at home can grease the flames of debate. Add another set of palates and a limited time frame to sample the local cuisine and suddenly there's a ravenous debate raging on the trustworthiness of UrbanSpoon ratings versus Zagat restaurant reviews. Avoid a fork fight over who has got the most inspired sea bass in town and achieve dining détente by allowing a third party, perhaps the concierge, to reserve a table for four.

Requisite relaxation
Much vacation time is spent lazing by the pool, sipping pina coladas and just generally doing nada. The art of sloth increases in complexity when more people are invited into the mix. Staking out one umbrella isn't too difficult, but hunting for a spot to accommodate four can be tricky — especially if you are holidaying during the busy season. Don't settle for subpar real estate. Decouple and reunite later once you've all had some sun.

Get your cash in a flash with direct deposits

Practical switch.
Registering for direct deposits, whatever your payment type, will save government money and you time

Whether you're a parent waiting for your Child Tax Benefit, a senior or snowbird waiting for your Canada Pension Plan payment or an unemployed worker waiting for your Employment Insurance payment, direct deposit puts money in your bank account faster, more securely and reliably than waiting for snail mail.

All Canadians, except for a few exceptions, are eligible to receive their federal government cheques by direct deposit.

Every year, the federal government makes almost 272 million payments to Canadians, 80 per cent of which are done electronically through direct deposit.

The federal government is hoping to soon convert the remaining 20 per cent to electronic, rather than paper, payments. How can they do that? With your help.

By enrolling in direct deposit, which you can do at your bank or financial institution, by calling 1-800-O-Canada, or online at directdeposit.gc.ca, you are giving the federal government permission to pay you electronically.

The benefits are many: you get your money faster, more securely, you never have to wait in the event of a postal strike and you'll be helping the federal government save almost $17.4 million a year in printing and mailing costs.

Here's a list of payments you can sign up for:

- Old Age Security
- Canada Pension Plan
- Child Tax Benefit
- Universal Child Care Benefit
- GST / HST / Income Tax
- Veterans pension and benefits

With the safety and security of electronic payments, never again will you hear yourself saying: "Where did I put that cheque?"

Sign up now

Save time. Why not sign up for direct deposit yourself and get your federal government benefits without having to check the mail box or travel to your bank or financial institution once your cheques arrive. Something none of us wants to do during winter especially.

Attention all students. Under the federal government's direct deposit program, students waiting for loan payments, tax refunds, rebates and grants can sign up to receive their payments electronically, making for faster, greener, more secure, hassle-free payments. Students wishing to sign up for direct deposit can enroll with the Canada Student Loans Program.

Foord felled in Lions' win at Mosaic

The B.C. Lions have lost special-teams player Stu Foord indefinitely due to a dislocated knee.

"I think that's kind of what occurred," Lions coach Mike Benevides said Monday. "I don't have the terminology for (the dislocation) yet. But that's a fair statement, and now (doctors) are trying to let it all settle down, and trying to manage his pain right now is the biggest thing."

Foord was injured in the second quarter of Sunday's 24-22 win in Regina. He was blocked by Graig Newman while covering on a B.C. punt.

Benevides indicated Foord, a six-year CFL veteran who also plays running back, will face a long recovery period.

Kessel's rescue proves costly

NHL. New Leaf Clarkson gets 10-game ban for leaving bench in pre-season line brawl with Sabres

It was an old-school scene that is a rarity in today's NHL, a wild rock-'em, sock-'em melee that included a player leaving the bench to join the fray and even a goalie fight.

The pre-season scrap between the Toronto Maple Leafs and Buffalo Sabres on Sunday night brought back memories of hockey yesteryear, when players dropped the gloves first and thought about the consequences later.

The rumble was the main talking point when the Maple Leafs resumed training camp on Monday.

Tension rose a night earlier when Toronto's Jamie Devane emerged victorious in a fight with Buffalo's Corey Tropp. John Scott then dropped his gloves to tangle with Maple Leafs forward Phil Kessel, who didn't engage and instead swung his stick at the Buffalo big man's ankles.

The Maple Leafs quickly moved in to protect their teammate — including David Clarkson off the bench — and the melee was on. A mildly interesting pre-season game suddenly had hockey fans circling Nov. 15 on their calendars for when the rivals next meet.

Toronto head coach Randy Carlyle said he erred by putting Kessel on the ice after the Devane-Tropp fight.

"Obviously I made a mistake but I never believed in my wildest dreams that the attack would come directed at that type of player from the opposition," Carlyle said. "But I was wrong."

Scott is a mountain of a man at six-foot-eight and 270 pounds. It didn't take long for the Leafs to move in and prevent their sniper from feeling Scott's wrath.

Clarkson didn't hold back and was automatically suspended 10 games without pay Monday. He'll forfeit $269,230.80 of his salary and won't make his regular-season debut until Oct. 25 in Columbus.

"In the situation I think that he felt that there was an advantage being taken by their player," Carlyle said. "It was of poor judgement and he did what he did and there's no way to defend it. You just accept what went on and move forward."

Kessel, who was issued a match penalty, was likely to receive further discipline for his stickwork.

Reports say Morrow on his way to St. Louis

The St. Louis Blues have signed forward Brenden Morrow to a one-year contract, reported by multiple media outlets to be worth $1.5 million US.

Morrow, who made $4.1 million last season, had 25 points (12 goals, 13 assists) in 44 games with Dallas and Pittsburgh last season. He added two goals and two assists in 14 playoff games with the Penguins.

Prior to joining Pittsburgh, the Carlyle, Sask., native had spent his entire 13-year career in Dallas, serving as the club's captain during the past seven seasons.

The six-foot, 210-pounder has 249 goals, 293 assists and 1,222 penalty minutes in 850 career NHL games.

He has represented Canada internationally seven times and was part of the gold-medal winning team at the 2010 Vancouver Olympics.

Morrow, 34, was originally selected by Dallas in the first round, 25th overall, of the 1997 draft.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Someone will try to provoke you in the hope that you will disgrace yourself in front of important people. Now that you know, you can control your feelings and pretend you are cool, calm and collected.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Don't let others push you too hard today. Taurus may be one of the most rugged signs but you have your limits. Know what they are and make sure you stay within them.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
There are moments when the pieces in the jigsaw fit and you see the bigger picture. This is one of them. It's also one of those moments when you realize anything is possible.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Take what is on offer today, even if it is less than you were hoping for. If you hold out too long, there is a chance others will lose patience and pull back from the brink. It's a good deal.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
What is right for you may not be right for someone else and it's important that you recognize that. If you expect someone you live or work with to like what you like then you will be disappointed.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
What you own and what you earn is high on your agenda at the moment and will get even higher over the next few days. Find ways to boost your income and try to work it so that you help other people too.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Whatever you start over the next few days you will have the power of the Sun behind you, which means you cannot fail. If you get a hunch then go with it and expect it to lead you to fame and fortune.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Mercury in your sign will clear your mind of foolish ideas and make it easier for you to pursue a course that leads to material success. Fantasy can be fun, but reality has its pleasurable moments too.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
If you think that life has been a bit tame, you will change your tune over the next few days. In fact, you may begin to wish that the pace of life was not quite so hectic. Too bad.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Changes in your world will have a knock-on effect on your day-to-day affairs. Should you be worried? Not really, because in the long-term these changes can only make you stronger.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Look beyond your everyday environment and discover places, people and ideas that expand your mind. Life is a fun learning experience, one that never ends.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It won't be easy to keep your fears under control. Whatever happens, and whatever you imagine might happen, realize that in the greater scheme of things it's of no real importance. SALLY BROMPTON
